

The world as we know it is changing. The past year has been challenging for most people to a greater or lesser degree. The circumstances have called for isolation, we have to keep a distance to each other physically and socially and withdraw to our homes.

This means that our home now, more than ever, is our sanctuary. Therefore, it is of utmost importance that this is a place of peace and relaxation and thereby, our base for recharging.

During many years of stressful life; mindfulness and conscious living have become essential to me and this has, in some ways, affected my way of design thinking also.

With the SS2021 collection, I have had a more sensorial focus than ever, and the detailed attention to qualities, materials, patterns and shapes, has translated into designs aimed at stimulating all the senses, to create a holistic sense of wellbeing.

Tactile qualities in a product is essential, and colours are proven to have a great impact on our minds. In these days of uncertainty, we all seek to find comfort and optimism. It is my belief that it makes a significant difference to us when we choose quality in the things we are surrounded by.

In this context, sustainability has become a major priority for me. And more than anything, I believe in timeless design and durable quality as the best means to achieve sustainability.

Fill your home with things you love and care about, and let it reflect who you are, and what matters to you!
